Course Description

The 17 Sustainable Development Goals of the United Nations are an urgent call for action. In this course, you will work together with students from partner universities (University of Amsterdam and Universidad del Desarrollo) and other disciplines. With your virtual team you will address global challenges, while taking into account both local and international contexts. How can you best combine your interdisciplinary and cultural backgrounds to contribute to solving complex global problems, such as climate change, economic inequality, digitalization and gender inequality. During the course you will be educated in intercultural competence and social entrepreneurship. While you will work virtually with your team, classes will mostly be on campus for UniGoe students.

Learning Objectives

In this course you will not only do sociological research, but also experience international and interdisciplinary cooperation with all its challenges and profits.

Kick-Off-Meeting - January 2024

- Are you interested in joining the course “Global Challenges, Local Answers” from April 2024?
- Would you like to expand your horizon and work with an international and interdisciplinary team of students from Germany, the Netherlands and Chile?
- Please write a short e-mail (in German or English) to the responsible teacher, Dr. Ina Alber-Armenat (ialber@uni-goettingen.de) indicating your interest and your study programme (Studienfach)
- We'll have a kick-off-meeting in January 2024 to talk about details and dates (due to the international and transatlantic composition of the team a bit different from our usual Göttingen schedule)

For questions or clarifications, don't hesitate to reach out anytime.
