Introduction to the Study of American Literature and Culture

This class is designed to introduce students to standard concepts, methods, and resources of (American) literary and cultural studies. We will discuss the major literary genres, with a particular focus on American narrative fiction, poetry, and drama. A reader with course material will be made available at the beginning of the semester via Stud.IP.

Requirements: credits may be obtained on the basis of regular attendance, active participation, minor reading quizzes, writing assignments, and a final exam.

Important disclaimer: As of mid February, we do not know in which format the class will take place (online, hybrid, or on campus). As soon as there are updates, these will be communicated via UniVZ and Stud.IP.
Suburbia, a place so clean it has to be dirty. At least, that is the sneaking suspicion that roughly a century's worth of writing on this most American of spaces has planted firmly in our collective unconscious—that behind the immaculate façade of each white frame house, beneath the lush green grass of each pristine front lawn lies hidden some horrible secret, something truly and utterly disturbing. It is precisely these dark undercurrents of suburban life, this sinister quality first identified in The Split-Level Trap (1960) by the term "disturbia", that we will explore in this class.

In doing so, our aim is to further specify and complicate a subgenre of American writing that has tentatively been called "the suburban gothic", a genre label that has so far largely been applied to middle-class realist novels by white men who have, perhaps not unexpectedly, framed suburbia as a disturbingly white, middle-class, feminized space. This conventional perspective will serve as our starting point, and we will begin by considering how Richard Yates's classic suburban drama Revolutionary Road (1961) mostly adheres to it. From there on, however, we will branch out and examine the ways in which female writers and writers of color have adapted and, in some cases, subverted these genre conventions, first by going back a few years to Maude Hutchins's Victorine (1959) and its Lychian take on sex and the suburbs, then to Gloria Naylor's hell-like vision of Black suburbia in Linden Hills (1985), and finally to Chang-Rae Lee's contemporary account of suburban life and mixed identity in Aloft (2004).

Ultimately, our goal will be to find out why it is that writers from such a wide range of different backgrounds keep returning, decade after decade, to the suburbs. What is it that makes suburbia so disturbing, so morbidly fascinating that it has given rise to an entire subgenre?

Please make sure to have purchased the following books well in advance of our first session. Other materials will be provided in class.

Required reading:

Richard Yates, Revolutionary Road

Maude Hutchins, Victorine

Gloria Naylor, Linden Hills

Chang-Rae Lee, Aloft

Registration: Attendance for this class is limited to 20 students. Binding (!) registration on Stud.IP between 01 March and 31 March 2022 is required. All news concerning this class will be posted on Stud.IP as well. The class will start in the first week of the semester. For final registration, participants need to attend the first session of class.

Parallel to class registration in Stud.IP from 01 to 31 March, you are also asked to send an email to our secretary Ms. Maliuta, clearly indicating which module you seek to take this class for (please avoid double and triple registrations for classes of the same type!). Please reach Ms. Maliuta at: natalia.maliuta@uni-goettingen.de

This class sets out to trace the project of Pearl S. Buck (1892-1973), a woman writer of worldwide recognition at her time who later on fell into oblivion.

Born as the daughter of American missionaries, Pearl Buck lived the first half of her life in a bilingual environment in China and spent the rest of her life travelling back and forth between the United States and Asia. She led a career that extended well beyond her eighty works of fiction and nonfiction and deep into the public (political) sphere. Passionately committed to the cause of social justice, Buck was active in the American civil rights and women's rights movements, and founded the first international adoption agency. Pearl Buck was an advocate of racial understanding and a vital cultural ambassador between the United States and China. Her socio-political activism made her one of the most interesting figures to influence American and Chinese cultural and literary history in the 20th century. Today, she is best known for her novel The Good Earth (1931), which won a Nobel Prize as well as a Pulitzer, but also the rest of her oeuvre is very much characterized by her attempt to create what might be called a distinct 'American China.'

In this class, we will discuss the project of this fascinating and controversial writer against the backdrop of its negotiation of diasporic experience, concepts of the 'self' and the 'other,' as well as its positioning in the context of middlebrow studies.

Class readings (such as excerpts and essays of Buck's project) will be provided in a reader at the beginning of the semester; but you need to purchase the three novels which we will read in full length. These are Pearl S. Buck's The Good Earth (Washington Square Press), East Wind, West Wind (Moyer Bell), and Kinfolk (Moyer Bell). Please note that while the editions listed here are preferred, other editions would be acceptable too.

Registration: Attendance for this class is limited to 20 students. Binding (!) registration on Stud.IP between 01 March and 31 March 2022 is required. In the context of mass extinction, loss of habitat and the commodification of nonhuman animals, literary texts are increasingly attempting to imagine the world from nonhuman perspectives. Within the emerging field of literary animal studies, which is concerned with the representation as well as the ethical and political implications of animals in literature, this class will consider how animal minds, emotions, perceptions, languages and cultures are presented in "convincing" ways.

Can the perspectives of animals ever be mediated by human languages? In which ways are other-than-human lifeways evoked? What might be the potentials but also the dangers of texts that employ animal narrators and focalizers? Focusing on fiction since the late twentieth century, we will discuss techniques and concepts such as literary perspective, defamiliarization, anthropomorphism and nonhuman agency in order to ask how and why the perspectives of nonhuman animals are imagined in literature and, moreover, how these texts engage with urgent human-animal concerns of our time.

Please purchase the following novel:
Barbara Gowdy, The White Bone (preferably by Picador, 978-0312264123)

Module zum Termin:
Poetry has long been understood as the form of literature that addresses silences as well as 'the unlanguageable,' be it philosophical, political or spiritual in nature. The Nobel Laureate Joseph Brodsky went so far as to suggest that poetry contains a unique type of thought that is specific to verse. But what are the tools and realms of poetry's estate? How does poetry manage to express the inexpressible? Through the analysis of poems by authors such as Hopkins, Eliot, Moore, Forché, Rankine, Harriet Muller and Danez Smith, we will explore themes such as prophesy, terror, witness, chaos, exclusion and silence. The seminar will take a laboratory approach to poetry in English, coupling close analytical and historical readings with practicums that allow students to understand poetic forms and logic from the inside. Participants in the seminar will produce poems as well as a term paper based on these experiments.

This class will explore American literature concerned with non-violence. Taking a historical perspective we will look at the influence of the American pacifist tradition—including writers such as Ballou and Thoreau—on the non-violent thought of Tolstoy and Gandhi, as well as Martin Luther King's interpretation of these sources as a central pillar of the 1960s civil rights movement. We will study King's seminal essays, memoir and sermons, as well as the writings of other social activists such as Dorothy Day, and the impact of the non-violent tradition on texts such as James Baldwin's The Fire New Time. We will explore the themes of power, violence, poverty, inequality and forgiveness, among others. The course will also address more recent writings on non-violence—as well as critical texts and arguments against non-violence—and the relevancy of this body of literature for the 21st century, in particular in the light of social movements such as Black Lives Matter and the rise of right-wing populism.

The aim of this workshop is to give students a chance to enhance their writing and composition skills and to practice the format of the 'Hausarbeit' (term paper) and the Take Home Exam. Using hands-on exercises, the stages of the writing process will be discussed from finding a topic to the final revisions. We will talk about the most common mistakes and how to avoid them as well as plagiarism and other writing-related topics. As this course is voluntary, students may choose to come to single sessions only, although a continuous attendance is highly recommended. Individual writing can be handed in and discussed during office hours. Please sign up on Stud.IP for details on session topics and organization. This workshop is especially recommended for students in the 'Proseminare' in literary and media studies. Yet, all other students writing term papers and Take Home Exams in North American Studies classes are also more than welcome to participate.

This course is designed to give students a thorough understanding and practice in aspects of research and professional skills pertaining to the field of American Studies. Topics of this class include features of successful non-academic writing, register, and style (such as the curriculum vitae, motivation letters/statements of purpose for studying abroad, or professional e-mails), the composition of book reviews, how to give good presentations, moderate class sessions, work successfully in groups, or efficiently manage time for written and oral assignments. The idea of this class is to practice and consolidate the above-listed skills in a close-knit and in-depth atmosphere to ensure that we come up with the best possible discussions, exchanges, and peer reviews. Thus, the number of participants is strictly limited to 12.

Requirements: credits (‘Prüfungsvorleistungen’, ‘qualifizierte Teilnahme’) may be obtained on the basis of regular attendance, active participation, minor written assignments, and a short presentation. [The ‘Prüfungsleistung’ of the module is offered in conjunction with the other part of this module, i.e., the "Academic Writing" class in the winter semester.]

For students in the BA North American Studies degree program, this class is part of module B.AS.102. As this class on "Research and Professional Skills" is offered in the summer semester only, students should make sure to take this class now. The first part of the module was taught in the winter. In case of questions, please contact the degree coordinator, Dr. Vanessa Künnemann.

This class will be taught by our guest professor Dr. Jane Desmond; Dr. Künnemann is listed here for administrative reasons

Can animals make "art?" And if so, what might that mean in terms of our obligations to them? From dancing cockatiel sensations on Youtube to megastar Laurie Anderson's Central Park NYC concert for dogs (yes, FOR, not about), artists, theorists, scientists, and humanities scholars have recently begun to explore this question in a multi-faceted way.

We will take this provocative question as our starting point for investigating performances, and public and scientific discourses about performances, of music, dance, and art making by non-human animals. We will combine this with an exploration of contemporary depictions of non-human animals by artists from Banksy to Damien Hirst to Isa Leshko and others who are actively exploring human-animal relations not only as visual material for their compositions, but also more deeply as a conceptual and theoretical investigatory focus for their art explorations. We will also encounter cross-species efforts at art-making collaboration, and questions like, can a gorilla own a copyright for a picture?

We will take a close look at contemporary popular culture's depictions of animals too, from animals on Tik Tok to memes to the mysterious popularity of cat videos on Instagram.

What goes on in this passion to represent animals in media? What cultural work are such images and phenomena doing? How might it relate to other art world practices beyond popular culture into the world of museums, fashion, etc.?

Climate change and its global effects, oceans full of (micro)plastics, the extraction of fossil fuels, metals, and other natural "resources," agriculture and livestock industries responsible for large-scale deforestation and the destruction of wildlife habitats all have detrimental effects on the environment—on particular regions as well as the life on our planet more generally. The damage done by unsustainable industries, toxic waste, and the accelerating loss of species and habitats: these are important topics that environmental documentaries address and that we will be concerned with in this course. We will systemically analyze the political, ecological, and ethical questions raised by films such as Al Gore's Inconvenient Sequel (2017), Leonardo di Caprio's Before the Flood (2016), the television series Years of Living Dangerously (2014-) on global warming and other issues that feature different celebrity hosts. We also consider films that address more specific environmental issues: Tapped (2009) on the bottled water industry, or GasLand (2010) on the harmful effects of hydraulic fracturing or "fracking," and Cowspiracy: The Sustainability Secret (2014) on the detrimental impact of livestock industries on the environment. We also consider the films, photography and books by the Canadian filmmaker Jennifer Baichwal and photographer Edward Burtynsky.

At stake are the many ways in which the future of our planet Earth is imperiled. Watching environmental films can be a disheartening experience, and one purpose of the genre is to raise awareness for the urgent issues they address. The aim of the course is not just to consider the environmental issues raised by these films, but also to analyze the strategies for presenting them: How do the films appeal to their viewers' conscience and to our emotions? How do they convey a sense of urgency? What narratives, images and rhetoric are employed? What role do the filmmakers themselves play as protagonists (celebrities, politicians, journalists)? How do they integrate scientific research, legal action, political and ethical questions? What cinematic and narrative modes are used? In order to discuss these questions, we will read theory and secondary literature that will allow us to develop a critical perspective on documentary films as a genre and a narrative medium.
A final selection of films will be presented with the syllabus in the first meeting. You are encouraged to watch the films listed here in advance. Some of them are available via Netflix and other streaming services.

Gross, Andrew S.
This is the second in a series of four lecture courses devoted to exploring the cultural history of American literature. It is designed to provide an overview of U.S.-American literary and cultural history, beginning roughly with the burning of the U.S.S. Philadelphia in Tripoli Harbor in 1804 and ending with the explosion of the U.S.S. Maine in Havana Harbor in 1898. As these framing examples suggest, the course will approach American literature and culture from an international perspective, considering both its relation overseas engagements and continental expansion, but also, more generally, American culture as part of part of the process of transnational dialogue and exchange that led to the modern era. As Emily Dickinson put it, "There is no frigate like a book." We will consider sentimentalism, Transcendentalism, and the various authors of the American Renaissance. We will read poetry in various forms, and also trace the development of various narrative genres and modes, placing romance, realism, regionalism, and naturalism in their historical context. We will consider painting, architecture, and popular culture, the emergence of photography, and their connection to major domestic crises such as the Civil War. We will also consider political movements such as abolitionism and the slave narrative as a foundational American genre. The aim of the lectures is to chart the cultural course of a new nation expanding geographically, financially, and politically, from the first hesitant attempts to consolidate the gains of the Revolutionary War to the self-confident maneuvering of a global player on the threshold of the "American century."

An electronic course packet will be provided.

Kommentar
By analyzing document speeches, pamphlets, essays, and articles from the colonial period to the 21st century against the backdrop of their specific political and cultural contexts, this class will retrace and critically reassess the formation of the cultural identity of the United States in all its complexity. The reading list includes seminal political and legal texts like the "Declaration of Independence" and the "Bill of Rights" but also writings by authors such as John Winthrop, J. Hector St. John de Crévecoeur, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Sojourner Truth, Frederick Douglass, W.E.B. Du Bois, Alain Locke, or Frederick Jackson Turner.

Registration: Attendance for this class is limited to 20 students. Binding (!) registration on Stud.IP between 01 March and 31 March 2022 is required. All news concerning this class will be posted on Stud.IP as well. The class will start in the first week of the semester. For final registration, participants need to attend the first session of class.

Kommentar

At least since establishing the intertribal National Congress of American Indians (NCAI) in 1944, indigenous nations have collaborated to fight for sovereignty, treaty rights, and cultural preservation. We will explore various 20th and 21st century activist approaches, starting with those taken by the American Indian Movement (AIM), the National Indian Youth Council (NIYC), and the Indians of All Tribes in the late 1960s and 1970s. Highlighting how the Red Power movement used the tactics of civil disobedience, takeovers, and demonstrations, we will read about and discuss the Occupation of Alcatraz, the seizing of the Mayflower II and the first National Day of Mourning demonstration, the occupation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and of Wounded Knee, the Trail of Broken Treaties, and the Longest Walk. In a second step, we will discuss how current indigenous environmental activism builds on the traditions of the second half of the 20th century and engages with the violence of settler colonialist dispossession and resource extraction. We will ask how environmental racism and injustice have harmed and continue to harm indigenous people, focusing on the Idle No More movement on the lands claimed by Canada and the Dakota Access Pipeline protests at the Standing Rock reservation, which gave rise to the activism of water protectors who conceive of water as much more than a commodity. The last section of the course will deal with the movement that raises awareness of missing and murdered indigenous women and girls (MMIWG) and the National Native American Boarding School Healing Coalition (NABS) which calls for a full accounting of the devastating impacts of boarding school policies, forced assimilation, and adoption. While contextualizing and investigating these political conflicts and activist practices, we will also pay attention to the rhetoric and argumentation of the assigned texts as well as reflect on our role as students of indigenous activism and on the significance of decolonization and indigenization.
The syllabus and the required readings will be available on Stud.IP at the beginning of the term.

The aim of this workshop is to give students a chance to enhance their writing and composition skills and to practice the format of the 'Hausarbeit' (term paper) and the Take Home Exam. Using hands-on exercises, the stages of the writing process will be discussed from finding a topic to the final revisions. We will talk about the most common mistakes and how to avoid them as well as plagiarism and other writing-related topics. As this course is voluntary, students may choose to come to single sessions only, although a continuous attendance is highly recommended. Individual writing can be handed in and discussed during office hours. Please sign up on Stud.IP for details on session topics and organization. This workshop is especially recommended for students in the 'Proseminare' in literary and media studies. Yet, all other students writing term papers and Take Home Exams in North American Studies classes are also more than welcome to participate.

This - voluntary but highly recommended - tutorial is taught in conjunction with the class 'Introducing Critical Theory I' (modules: B.AS.301; M.EP.01b; M.EP01b-L). The tutorial provides an opportunity to discuss the texts covered in the course, to address questions and to support the comprehension of the theories and critical concepts in question by means of close readings and in-depth discussion. Difficulties and questions regarding the theoretical texts can be addressed and revisited according to students' needs. Hence participating in the tutorial will also be helpful as a preparation for the final exam in the Critical Theory class.

Further material will be provided on Stud.IP.

Details about the organization of this tutorial will be announced in the first session.

In this course we will engage with the various forms in which literary texts and art works constitute worlds: the narrative strategies of fiction and nonfiction will be considered along with visual arts, including larger installations and assemblages. Starting from the presumption that world building largely depends on the imagination of readers and audiences, their conjecture and emotional investment, we will engage with the following questions: How do readers immerse themselves in what they read? How do they come to inhabit the life worlds of characters, whether real or fictional, human or nonhuman? How do texts and art works prompt us to imagine worlds that reach into historically, culturally, and geographically unfamiliar terrains?

We will address these questions by considering short stories, novels, and contemporary art. In order to approach world building as a concept, we will study relevant theoretical texts by Mikhail Bakhtin, Wolfgang Iser, David Herman, Hannah Meretoja and Alexandra Horowitz, ranging from narratology and literary anthropology to etiology and art history.

Primary texts include Ocean Vuong’s novel On Earth We’re Briefly Gorgeous; short stories by Lucia Berlin, Lauren Groff, George Saunders and selected poetry. Furthermore, a one-day excursion to the upcoming documenta 15 in Kassel (18 June—25 Sep 2022), directed by the artists’ collective ruangrupa (Jakarta), will constitute a relevant component of the seminar: much of contemporary art deals with the political, cultural and ecological dimensions of the world(s) we share with other earth-dwellers—the challenges posed by migration, the current pandemic, poverty, generational conflict and climate change as well as new ideas of collectivity and cohabitation in the 21st century.

Please acquire and read in advance Ocean Vuong’s novel On Earth We’re Briefly Gorgeous (preferably the Penguin edition, ISBN 9780525562047)

This class will be taught by our guest professor Dr. Jane Desmond; Dr. Künnemann is listed here for administrative reasons.

Although this course is anchored in cultural anthropology and draws on its signature research method and writing genre of "ethnography," it reaches outward to embrace multiple intellectual communities who have become deeply engaged with questions of the 'animal turn' and the turn toward reconceiving our world of investigation as "post-human" or the "more than human," including literature and multi-media. Post-humanism challenges us to embrace a paradigm shift from one in which humans are the center of meaning to one that recognizes that humans are not the only beings living in, acting upon, and making meaning in the world. How might ethnography, a mode of research and genre of writing traditionally based on long-term immersion in various communities, be reconceived when our object of investigation changes -- (now no longer solely focused on human communities, but on more-than-human communities)? For example, "How," as John Hartigan provocatively asks, "do you interview a plant?!"

Given both the imperial/colonial and anti-racist origins of early anthropological thinking a hundred years ago, and the "decolonizing" efforts within the field since the mid 1980s, how might we engage the concept of "ethnography" as a way of knowing now? What are our (researcher) obligations to a wider world and to one that exceeds the human? How is ethnography transforming to meet the challenges of enlarging our focus to include the "more than human"—the cohabitants of human worlds like non-human animals, like "forces of nature" such as gravity -- "Vibrant Matter" in Jane Bennett's compelling words -- and of multiple conceptions of a world that is comprised, in various cosmologies including those of some indigenous groups, as always already more-than-human?

Finally, we must ask, what is the goal of the work we will do? How can these new questions produce, ultimately, new forms of knowledge? New forms of writing and image-making? Can this new knowledge be leveraged to help create a more just world? How must our modes of research, of analysis, of creative work, and of public engagement evolve to address this challenge?

Our readings and viewings will be anchored in the North American setting but placed in comparative dimension by readings focused in other regions too. Beyond reading, viewing, and discussion, we will experiment in this seminar with ways of "imagining otherwise" as we try to reimagine "ethnography" as a practice involving the more than human worlds.
We might do bird watching, listening to rivers, attend to plants, imagine the divergent life of biota in the gut…and so on. Each of these experimental exercises will hone our attentiveness in different ways and also reveal the limits of previous methods. Become comfortable with an exploratory mindset that tries something with no guarantee of a "successful" outcome. "Success" lies not in the product but in the process of learning, questioning, and refashioning. That too is part of the epistemology of exploration for this seminar.

Books or excerpts may be drawn from the following list:

"The idea that family values—by which one meant women's values—could shape the body politic did, in fact, lose force after the Civil War. Middle-class women wanting to do something in the world now began to enter the world directly, in large numbers, and without apology, thereby creating the New Woman by the century's end" (Nina Baym, Introduction, The Lamplighter).

This class sets out to discuss the emergence of the 'New Woman' and the movement surrounding this socio-cultural phenomenon. We will trace the origins and the dynamic development of this almost iconic - and highly controversial - figure in the American literary and cultural scene of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century, focusing on the variegated genres and styles of writing that address new womanhood. The 'new woman question,' as it was often dubbed at the time, revolved around heated debates of gender inequality, the promotion of various reform movements in the U.S. of those years, the oscillation between the private and the public sphere, and the critique of the concept of 'true womanhood,' the powerful predecessor of new womanhood.
In order to trace these topics and concepts, we will first investigate theoretical texts that engage with the new woman movement of the late 19th and early 20th century, reflecting upon the concept's embeddedness in political and socio-economic discourses of the time, and then relate those findings to selected fictional accounts of the new woman in U.S.-American texts. Our discussions will center on the cartoons of the Brinkley Girls by Nell Brinkley, Charlotte Perkins Gilman's "The Yellow Wall-Paper", Henry James's The Bostonians, Theodore Dreiser's Sister Carrie, Kate Chopin's The Awakening, and Dorothy Canfield Fisher's The Home-Maker. Please note that this is a preliminary list which will be finalized by the beginning of the summer semester.

A number of readings will come in the form of excerpts or single chapters; most texts will be made available in an e-reader via Stud.IP, but you are asked to purchase the following four novels which we will discuss in full length:

This course will introduce students to the writing of Ralph Waldo Emerson through close readings of some of his most famous essays and lectures. The focus will be philosophical but also stylistic. We will explore how Emerson's unique style informs what he has to say. In deciphering his arguments and his devices, we will enlist the assistance of some of his most dedicated contemporary readers including Stanley Cavell, Lawrence Buell, and Sharon Cameron. Their dialogues with this major US-American thinker alert us to the presence of the everyday in Emerson's philosophical idealism, his concern with disappointment, loss, grief, loneliness, and the sometimes overwhelming pressure to conform. Everyday Emerson encourages us to trust ourselves and find sustenance in nature. He also encourages us to question who the self is and what nature means. Emerson was a thinker who in many ways anticipated self-help authors in his passion for personal improvement. He also shows himself to be forward-looking in remarks that anticipate contemporary psychology and ecology. His contemporaries took him therapeutically. We will see what resources he has to offer in facing the challenges of our time.

Please acquire the Library of America edition of Ralph Waldo Emerson: Essays and Lectures. If that is too expensive, you can also look for a used copy of the Viking Portable Library Emerson, edited by Carl Bode and Malcolm Cowley. Though Emerson's writing is widely available online, I recommend acquiring a book you can carry around, mark up, and keep on your night stand.

Registration: Attendance for this class is limited to 20 students. Binding (!) registration on Stud.IP between 01 March and 31 March 2022 is required. All news concerning this class will be posted on Stud.IP as well. The class will start in the first week of the semester. For final registration, participants need to attend the first session of class.

In this course we will engage with the various forms in which literary texts and art works constitute worlds: the narrative strategies of fiction and nonfiction will be considered along with visual arts, including larger installations and assemblages. Starting from the presumption that world building largely depends on the imagination of readers and audiences, their conjecture and emotional investment, we will engage with the following questions: How do readers immerse themselves in what they read? How do they come to inhabit the life worlds of characters, whether real or fictional, human or nonhuman? How do texts and art works prompt us to imagine worlds that reach into historically, culturally, and geographically unfamiliar terrains?

We will address these questions by considering short stories, novels, and contemporary art. In order to approach world building as a concept, we will study relevant theoretical texts by Mikhail Bakhtin, Wolfgang Iser, David Herman, Hannah Meretoja and Alexandra Horowitz, ranging from narratology and literary anthropology to etiology and art history.

Primary texts include Ocean Vuong's novel On Earth We're Briefly Gorgeous; short stories by Lucia Berlin, Lauren Groff, George Saunders and selected poetry. Furthermore, a one-day excursion to the upcoming documenta 15 in Kassel (18 June—25 Sep 2022), directed by the artists' collective ruangrupa (Jakarta), will constitute a relevant component of the seminar: much of contemporary art deals with the political, cultural and ecological dimensions of the world(s) we share with other earth-dwellers—the challenges posed by migration, the current pandemic, poverty, generational conflict and climate change as well as new ideas of collectivity and cohabitation in the 21st century.

Please acquire and read in advance Ocean Vuong's novel On Earth We're Briefly Gorgeous (preferably the Penguin edition, ISBN 9780525562047)

This class will be taught by our guest professor Dr. Jane Desmond; Dr. Küninemann is listed here for administrative reasons

Although this course is anchored in cultural anthropology and draws on its signature research method and writing genre of "ethnography," it reaches outward to embrace multiple intellectual communities who have become deeply engaged with questions of the 'animal turn' and the turn toward reconceiving our world of investigation as "post-human" or the "more than human," including literature and multi-media. Post-humanism challenges us to embrace a paradigm shift from one in which humans are the center of meaning to one that recognizes that humans are not the only beings living in, acting upon, and making meaning in the world. How might ethnography, a mode of research and genre of writing traditionally based on long-term immersion in various communities, be reconceived when our object of investigation changes -- (now no longer solely focused on human communities, but on more-than-human communities)? For example, "How," as John Hartigan provocatively asks, "do you interview a plant?"

Given both the imperial/colonial and anti-racist origins of early anthropological thinking a hundred years ago, and the "decolonizing" efforts within the field since the mid 1980s, how might we engage the concept of "ethnography" as a way of knowing now? What are our (researcher) obligations to a wider world and to one that exceeds the human? How is ethnography transforming to meet the challenges of enlarging our focus to include the "more than human"—the cohabitants of human worlds like non-human animals, like "forces of nature" such as gravity -- "Vibrant Matter" in Jane Bennett's compelling words -- and of multiple conceptions of a world that is comprised, in various cosmologies including those of some indigenous groups, as always already more-than-human?

Finally, we must ask, what is the goal of the work we will do? How can these new questions produce, ultimately, new forms of knowledge? New forms of writing and image-making? Can this new knowledge be leveraged to help create a more just world? How must our modes of research, of analysis, of creative work, and of public engagement evolve to address this challenge?

Our readings and viewings will be anchored in the North American setting but placed in comparative dimension by readings focused in other regions too. Beyond reading, viewing, and discussion, we will experiment in this seminar with ways of "imagining otherwise" as we try to reimagine "ethnography" as a practice involving the more than human worlds. We might do bird watching, listening to rivers, attend to plants, imagine the divergent life of biota in the gut…and so on. Each of these experimental exercises will hone our attentiveness in different ways and also reveal the limits of previous methods. Become comfortable with an exploratory mindset that tries something with no guarantee of a "successful" outcome. "Success" lies not in the product but in the process of learning, questioning, and refashioning. That too is part of the epistemology of exploration for this seminar.

"The idea that family values—by which one meant women's values—could shape the body politic did, in fact, lose force after the Civil War. Middle-class women wanting to do so-thing in the world now began to enter the world directly, in large numbers, and without apology, thereby creating the New Woman by the century's end" (Nina Baym, Introduction, The Lamplighter).

This class sets out to discuss the emergence of the 'New Woman' and the movement surrounding this socio-cultural phenomenon. We will trace the origins and the dynamic development of this almost iconic - and highly controversial - figure in the American literary and cultural scene of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century, focusing on the varie-gated genres and styles of writing that address new womanhood. The 'new woman question,' as it was often dubbed at the time, revolved around heated debates of gender inequality, the promotion of various reform movements in the U.S. of those years, the oscillation between the private and the public sphere, and the critique of the concept of 'true woman-hood,' the powerful predecessor of new womanhood.

In order to trace these topics and concepts, we will first investigate theoretical texts that engage with the new woman movement of the late 19th and early 20th century, reflecting upon the concept's embeddedness in political and socio-economic discourses of the time, and then relate those findings to selected fictional accounts of the new woman in U.S.-American texts. Our discussions will center on the cartoons of the Brinkley Girls by Nell Brinkley, Charlotte Perkins Gilman's "The Yellow Wall-Paper", Henry James's The Bostonians, Theodore Dreiser's Sister Carrie, Kate Chopin's The Awakening, and Dorothy Canfield Fisher's The Home-Maker. Please note that this is a preliminary list which will be final-ized by the beginning of the summer semester.

A number of readings will come in the form of excerpts or single chapters; most texts will be made available in an e-reader via Stud.IP, but you are asked to purchase the following four novels which we will discuss in full length:

Please note: while the above listed editions are preferred; other editions are acceptable as long as they are unabridged.

Registration: Attendance for this class is limited to 20 students. Binding (!) registration on Stud.IP between 01 March and 31 March 2022 is required. turn' and the turn toward reconceiving our world of investigation as "post-human" or the "more than human," including literature and multi-media. Post-humanism challenges us to embrace a paradigm shift from one in which humans are the center of meaning to one that recognizes that humans are not the only beings living in, acting upon, and making meaning in the world. How might ethnography, a mode of research and genre of writing traditionally based on long-term immersion in various communities, be reconceived when our object of investigation changes -- (now no longer solely focused on human communities, but on more-than-human communities)? For example, "How," as John Hartigan provocativously asks, "do you interview a plant?!"

Given both the imperial/colonial and anti-racist origins of early anthropological thinking a hundred years ago, and the "decolonizing" efforts within the field since the mid 1980s, how might we engage the concept of "ethnography" as a way of knowing now? What are our (researcher) obligations to a wider world and to one that exceeds the human?
How is ethnography transforming to meet the challenges of enlarging our focus to include the "more than human"—the cohabitants of human worlds like non-human animals, like "forces of nature" such as gravity -- "Vibrant Matter" in Jane Bennett's compelling words -- and of multiple conceptions of a world that is comprised, in various cosmologies including those of some indigenous groups, as always already more-than-human?

Finally, we must ask, what is the goal of the work we will do? How can these new questions produce, ultimately, new forms of knowledge? New forms of writing and image-making? Can this new knowledge be leveraged to help create a more just world? How must our modes of research, of analysis, of creative work, and of public engagement evolve to address this challenge?

Our readings and viewings will be anchored in the North American setting but placed in comparative dimension by readings focused in other regions too. Beyond reading, viewing, and discussion, we will experiment in this seminar with ways of "imagining otherwise" as we try to reimagine "ethnography" as a practice involving the more than human worlds. We might do bird watching, listening to rivers, attend to plants, imagine the divergent life of biota in the gut…and so on. Each of these experimental exercises will hone our attentiveness in different ways and also reveal the limits of previous methods. Become comfortable with an exploratory mindset that tries something with no guarantee of a "successful" outcome. "Success" lies not in the product but in the process of learning, questioning, and refashioning. That too is part of the epistemology of exploration for this seminar.

Registration: Attendance for this class is limited to 20 students. Binding (!) registration on Stud.IP between 01 March and 31 March 2022 is required. All news concerning this class will be posted on Stud.IP as well. The class will start in the first week of the semester. For final registration, participants need to attend the first session of class.

Parallel to class registration in Stud.IP from 01 to 31 March, you are also asked to send an email to our secretary Ms. Maliuta, clearly indicating which module you seek to take this class for (please avoid double and triple registrations for classes of the same type!). Please reach Ms. Maliuta at: natalia.maliuta@uni-goettingen.de

Important disclaimer: As of mid February, we do not know in which format the class will take place (online, hybrid, or on campus). As soon as there are updates, these will be communicated via UniVZ and Stud.IP.

"The idea that family values—by which one meant women's values—could shape the body politic did, in fact, lose force after the Civil War. Middle-class women wanting to do something in the world now began to enter the world directly, in large numbers, and without apology, thereby creating the New Woman by the century's end" (Nina Baym, Introduction, The Lamplighter).

This class sets out to discuss the emergence of the 'New Woman' and the movement surrounding this socio-cultural phenomenon. We will trace the origins and the dynamic development of this almost iconic - and highly controversial - figure in the American literary and cultural scene of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century, focusing on the variegated genres and styles of writing that address new womanhood. The 'new woman question,' as it was often dubbed at the time, revolved around heated debates of gender inequality, the promotion of various reform movements in the U.S. of those years, the oscillation between the private and the public sphere, and the critique of the concept of 'true womanhood,' the powerful predecessor of new womanhood.

In order to trace these topics and concepts, we will first investigate theoretical texts that engage with the new woman movement of the late 19th and early 20th century, reflecting upon the concept's embeddedness in political and socio-economic discourses of the time, and then relate those findings to selected fictional accounts of the new woman in U.S.-American texts. Our discussions will center on the cartoons of the Brinkley Girls by Nell Brinkley, Charlotte Perkins Gilman's "The Yellow Wall-Paper", Henry James's The Bostonians, Theodore Dreiser's Sister Carrie, Kate Chopin's The Awakening, and Dorothy Canfield Fisher's The Home-Maker. Please note that this is a preliminary list which will be finalized by the beginning of the summer semester.

A number of readings will come in the form of excerpts or single chapters; most texts will be made available in an e-reader via Stud.IP, but you are asked to purchase the following four novels which we will discuss in full length:

Please note: while the above listed editions are preferred; other editions are acceptable as long as they are unabridged.

This course will introduce students to the writing of Ralph Waldo Emerson through close readings of some of his most famous essays and lectures. The focus will be philosophical but also stylistic. We will explore how Emerson's unique style informs what he has to say. In deciphering his arguments and his devices, we will enlist the assistance of some of his most dedicated contemporary readers including Stanley Cavell, Lawrence Buell, and Sharon Cameron. Their dialogues with this major US-American thinker alert us to the presence of the everyday in Emerson's philosophical idealism, his concern with disappointment, loss, grief, loneliness, and the sometimes overwhelming pressure to conform. Everyday Emerson encourages us to trust ourselves and find sustenance in nature. He also encourages us to question who the self is and what nature means. Emerson was a thinker who in many ways anticipated self-help authors in his passion for personal improvement. He also shows himself to be forward-looking in remarks that anticipate contemporary psychology and ecology. His contemporaries took him therapeutically. We will see what resources he has to offer in facing the challenges of our time.

Please acquire the Library of America edition of Ralph Waldo Emerson: Essays and Lectures. If that is too expensive, you can also look for a used copy of the Viking Portable Library Emerson, edited by Carl Bode and Malcolm Cowley. Though Emerson's writing is widely available online, I recommend acquiring a book you can carry around, mark up, and keep on your night stand.

The colloquium invites advanced students who are preparing or already working on their B.A. or M.A. thesis. It will provide the opportunity to present and discuss your work in progress and receive valuable feedback. Further sessions will be on academic writing, research, and current developments in American cultural and literary studies as well as critical theory.

The course also gives students the opportunity to suggest specific topics and/or theoretical texts relevant to the field of American Studies and with regard to current research projects that may be taken up in individual class discussions. If you have a particular topic or text in mind that you want to propose for discussion, please send an email to Prof. Tischleder before the beginning of the semester.

If you wish to take this colloquium as part of your "fachwissenschaftliche Vertiefung" (B.AS.501) or as part of your "Master-Abschlussmodul" (M.AS.04 or M.EP.06b), please consult the instructor's office hours well in advance. (Please note that for module M.AS.04, the oral exam (Prüfungsleistung) takes place in conjunction with the second class of the module, not this class!).

Students who wish to take this class as part of module M.EP.09b and who need to write a "Forschungsbericht" as a "Prüfungsleistung" in this module, too, are asked to contact Prof. Tischleder before the beginning of the semester.

Please also note that we also recommend to take this colloquium as a voluntary component of module B.EP.51, i.e., before you prepare your B.A. thesis in North American Studies. While you will not be given credit for the colloquium in the context of this module, participation is still highly recommended.

Important disclaimer: As of mid February, we do not know in which format the class will take place (online, hybrid, or on campus). As soon as there are updates, these will be communicated via UniVZ and Stud.IP.
